

Kevin Bransfield grew up in New Jersey and started photographing there as a teenager. After high school he went to London for the summer and fell in love with Europe and lived in various cities there for five years. When he came back to the United States he traveled around the country looking for the perfect place to call home and discovered Santa Cruz. He studied photography at Cabrillo College and UCSC. Kevin got his masters degree from San Jose State where he had the good fortune of having Brian Taylor as his beloved teacher. He has taught at a few different colleges before becoming the head of the photo department at Monterey Peninsula College. Kevin photographs with both film and digital cameras. He has photographed miniature golf courses around the United States. His latest work is an exploration of high-speed photography in the vein of Harold Edgerton. Kevin lives in Capitola with his family and enjoys playing guitar, blues harmonica and of course photographing.
